Florida State University

Ever since I was a child, I have loved reading and read whenever I had the chance to. As I grew up and started taking AP English classes in high school, I discovered I also liked writing and began to find the act of writing and trying to improve my skills to be more rewarding than reading ever was to me. These interests have obviously led me to study the one subject I have always liked, English, and have piqued my interest in a career in law.

I am currently enrolled in Florida State University where I plan to graduate with a degree in English: Editing, Writing and Media with a minor in American History in Fall of 2025. Throughout my time at Florida State, I have maintained high grades in my academic career and have completed courses that have allowed me to perfect and expand my skills in writing, editing, and research. The variety of courses I have taken have allowed me to gain knowledge in areas such as rhetoric and have allowed me to experiment with different writing styles. As an English major, I am proficient in reading and analyzing a variety of texts and am more than excited to continue to use these skills when I attend law school and expand my studies. I am also minoring in American History, and I believe my interest in our country's past as well as the wide variety of history classes I have completed will be of great use to me when I begin to study law.

I have worked with educating children, in one way or another, since I was 16 years old. With my experience being a tutor at the Kumon Math and Reading Center and my time volunteering at a local elementary school in high school, I have gained experience in time management and organization. Working with younger kids has taught me how to be patient and how to acknowledge topics from an outside point of view in order to know how to best explain it to a child.

My academic and work experience have allowed me to develop a strong work ethic and have strengthened my ability to work under pressure. I have always been eager to learn and know that this will not change in the future as I continue to expand my education.

Sincerely,

Nagham Mashraqi
